

The Unpopular Review, January-June 1915, Vol. 3 (Classic Reprint)

Excerpt from The Unpopular Review, January-June 1915, Vol. 3 Will the readers of The Unpopular be generous enough to accept the disavowal of arrogance in the title of this essay? They may be assured that, if the writer makes any pretensions to philosophy, it is only on the very modest basis of the Horatian command to wonder at nothing - nil admirari. Sitting in his study and conning the daily reports of the war and some of the innumerable opinions it has called into type, going about among his friends and listening with stopped mouth to their clamorous comments, such a man might well be impressed by the wide-spread surprise and consternation over the grim reality thrust upon us, and might be saddened by his inability to share in those feelings. He would be humiliated at times by the reproach of pessimism, in answer to his occasional apologetic protests; and so would try to flatter himself with the hope that his lack of wonder was philosophical, and that perhaps others were not so much amazed as, in their desire to appear humane, their words seemed to imply. For, after all, what are the facts? Just one hundred years ago Europe was coming out of the desolating madness of the French Revolution and the Napoleonic Wars, exhausted and apparently chastened. But a century is a long time to those who believe in the acceleration of Progress. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books.
